and summer and fall filled with sightseers almost daily pushing out upon the Ohio river to seek this little Island near Marietta. Why? Is it a summer playground? Is it an Isle of Wight? Is its center a mansion? Are its banks terraced? Are its trees filled with aweetest of songsters as they were once in the halycon days when its owner, Harman Blennerhasset, took his bride there and changed this island into an Edenic garden, as Nebuchadnezzar, who had courted Princess Amytis among the hills of Ecbatana, to humor the whims of his queen, had lifted high for the wonderment of the world the famous "hanging gardens of Babylon?" Oh, no. Blennerhasset island today is of little intrinsic value. A few scrub trees, a few rocks, perhaps a few hov lands in the middle of this Ohio river, are all the aesthetic beauties it has to offer to the landscape artist. But to the historian Blennerbasset has the same fascination as have the broken walls of Kenilworth castle. Blennerhasset is immortal on account of the infumous history of Aaron Burr. That is where the ex-vice president stopped on his way to establish a monarchy in the great southwest. It has an evil fame as the rendezvous of the traitorous con spirators of that day, just as is that house in a side street of Washington in which Mary E. When called upon to surrender he handed over his sword, hilt first, to one of his captors. Instead of the British soldier receiving it and placing his captive under guard, he took the sword and plunged it through the heart of his helpless victim. The rent in the shirt showed where the sword had piorced its way into the bleeding flesh. Of course such a cowardly act as this was condemned by the British army as well as by the American. But the condemnation of the murderer has not anything to do with my thought. The one fact I want to impress upon you is this. She opened the gates by night, and Rome fell. But as soon as the northern barbarians became masters of Caesar's throne they destroyed the woman who betrayed her country. They gave her their shields of ornamental silver and gold, but they hurled those shields at her with all the force of their mighty arms until her mangled and bleeding and lifeless body lay buried under her day he was seated in the gallery of the use of commons when a statesman mencing his speech he said: "I see in the gallery of this house a contemptible character who, by the betrayal of his own land, has forfelted every right to

Man treading the path of sin, do not be a fool. Do not suppose that those sinful people who are praising you now will fawn upon you after your morals and money are gone. All that the saloonkeeper wants is your gold; blood, was bought by the evil priests, who had turned against Judas as your companions of sin will yet turn against

The ensiest way to make an apostate is not by denouncing or ridiculing the developing the tendencies to sin which have not been eradicated from his nature. Let me illustrate my thought practically. You have all wandered through the northern forests in the winter time. Everywhere you have seen the tall trunks of the trees supporting the bare branches. Not a leaf is in sight; not a flower is blooming. Where are the millions upon millions of leaves which as an arched roof covered the mountain pathways last summer? All But if you will rub your fingers lightly over the bark of those branches you can see where new buds and new sprouts will come forth just as soon as springtime places to her lips the silver trumpet of the warm winds. As I approach a man who is called a Christian man I figuratively find him without sin, but as I touch his heart I find, still figuratively speaking, that all over his heart are latent sinful buds easy to be developed. Unless a man lives close to Christ and continues to live close to Christ these evil buds will sprout and soms cover the tree beanches almost in day. The reason Judas be trayed Christ was because he allowed his latent buds of sin to develop; that

"Judas not different from his fellow apostics? How was that?" some one asks me. "Why, Christ called him a devil." Aye, my friend, that is true. But Christ did not call Judas a devil in the sense that he was in the beginning any different from any other of the apostles. Indeed, I know he was just about the same. The apostles at that time honored and respected Judas so much that they made him their treasurer. He was their almoner; he handled all their moneys. He was not impulsive like Peter. He was a caim, cool calculator. Why, if Peter had been elected treasurer in Judas' place, the first ten beggars who came to him would have got all that he had, and no provision would have been left for the because at first he was loyal to his Master and he was very careful in have been! bandling the funds.

But when Judas began to look after the money the old latent sin of his life warmer and budded and sprouted. Covetousness was Judas' sin. Ev-
